FROG HUNTING IN THE DISMAL SWAMP

Profitable Industry for Pasquotank Fishermen.

HOW FROGS ARE CAUGHT

A Night Hunt in the Swamps and the Valuable Boat Load that Was the Catch—Sold in Baltimore at $2.50 a Dozen.

Since the days of old Black Beard, the pirate, the fishermen of the Pasquotank River have lived and thrived and died along the inland waters of Eastern North Carolina. With every turn of the season they go out in their little shad boats, seeking some means of making an honest livelihood. The Pasquotank shad boat is peculiar to these waters. It is a rather deep built row boat, minus car locks, with a short stumpy sail attached. It is the most cumbersome looking craft afloat, yet the safest in bad weather. The fiercest storms are weathered in these tubs, whose depth brings the gunwale to the waist of the fisherman.

Recently the North Carolina Legislature passed a law which so effected the oyster industry as to practically ruin the fishermen of the month of April. The law came as a surprise and left them to make the best of the short season. In addition to this, the shad and herring fisheries have been so exceedingly poor, so that the loyal fishermen of the Albemarle section are put to it, so to speak, in order to make ends meet. Terrapin and turtle are caught and sold, and this trade is in itself an interesting study. The most significant of all the river inhabitants is now becoming the most popular. The croaking swamp frog has forced the noble shad to take a back seat. In fact, it is a wonder more attention has not already been paid to this industry. Lately the Baltimore market has produced a demand for these dainty frogs, which are now basking in the sunshine.

The bull frog is exciting the Pasquotank fisherman and turning him topsy turvy.

Would any one believe that the frog may be termed "sweetwater" coming from the swamps, from from other localities? Can you imagine yourself entering a stylish cafe, to call for frog legs, served a la Albemarle, with cat food? Perhaps it is a stretch of the imagination a bit, but the fact remains, nevertheless, that the swamp frog of Eastern Carolina is a dainty thing; a frog which measures up to the standard of frog quality. Swamp frogs are of a rare flavor. The rich grasses and other frog eatables are inclined to give the flesh a tone, which the epicure chooses to term "excellent." That is why Dismal Swamp frogs are the best for eating purposes; better by far than your ordinary frog from the box.

Does it sound incredible to say that bull frogs sell at $2.50 per dozen on the Baltimore market, and that shippers get $2.50 for them delivered in Baltimore? Nevertheless, it is a fact. The cause and the result of this is a fact in the case and is particularly interesting and attractive. The frog is discarded for frog marketing; they must be secured. Perhaps the frogs are out of the question, for frogs are too stupid and feeble to go into them. If one went out in the old way, with a fishing line and a hook of red flannel, it might take a week's time to make a good haul. The swamp does not allow walking. The frog must be caught. The hunter, if he is to be successful, must be cunning. He must be secured, for frogs are out of the question, for frogs are too stupid and feeble to go into them.
